National Traffic Safety Institute Moves Corporate Headquarters to Tucson

(TUCSON, Ariz.) --- On the heels of a recent announcement by the City of Tucson awarding an exclusive contract to the National Traffic Safety Institute (NTSI) for traffic citation dismissal programs, the NTSI has relocated its corporate headquarters to Tucson. The company employs 500 individuals all across the country, 50 of whom occupy full time equivalent positions. Ten of those positions are now based in the Tucson corporate office. Prior to its relocation to Tucson, the NTSI was headquartered in Staten Island, New York.

As part of the relocation, NTSI corporate officer and long-time Tucsonan Paul Hallums was promoted to Executive Vice President and Director of Operations. Hallums joined the NTSI's Tucson staff in 1999 as Regional Director, leaving behind a career with the Tucson Police Department that spanned more than 20 years.

"The NTSI has been a proud member of the Tucson business community for many years, and it's great that we can now call the Old Pueblo 'home'," stated Hallums. "Our partnerships with the City of Tucson and Pima County have served as national models, and we look forward to replicating our local success in the 26 other states and countless communities that we serve nationwide," he concluded.

In addition to citation dismissal programs, the NTSI offers courses in corporate safe driving, defensive driving, teen and elder driving, theft prevention, anger management, youth alcohol and drug awareness, life skills, civic responsibility, CPR, and first aid.

Founded in 1974, the National Traffic Safety Institute has trained millions of people across the country to be safer drivers. It remains the nation's oldest and largest traffic safety program, and stands among Tucson's most valuable and reliable community services.
